CHINA holds huge potential for American exporters, particularly in key sectors such as energy, environmental technology, biotechnology, medical equipment, construction material, services, and franchising. In 2005, U.S. exports to China grew 20.5%. In terms of U.S. goods exports, China was fourth, at $41.8 billion, behind only Canada, Mexico, and Japan. Missouri's exports to China grew 36.5 % in 2005, higher than the national average, reaches historical high, $499.5 million.

Beijing (pop. 14.93 mil. 2004) the capital of China. As a cultural, educational and scientific development center, Beijing has grown rapidly in commercial and service activities in recent years. The 2008 Olympics will provide hundreds of opportunities for U.S. firms, and the Beijing Science and Technology Park continues to attract multiple technology companies for trade and investment purposes.

Inner Mongolia (pop. 23.84 mil, 2004) is an autonomous region of China. Its GDP in 2005 was 47.2 billion, a growth of 21.6% from 2004. Its main industries have grown up around coal, power-generation, forestry-related industries and so on. It now emphasizes on six unique and competitive industries, namely energy, chemicals, metallurgy, equipment manufacturing, processing of farm produce as well as high-tech products.

Shanghai (pop. 18.7 mil. 2004) is now firmly established as the country's leading financial and commercial center. Since 1992, Shanghai has achieved double-digit growth in its GDP rate for fourteen consecutive years. In 2005, Shanghai's growth rate reached 11.1%. Shanghai operates the largest and busiest port in China with foreign trade volume accounting for a quarter of the country's total. The 2010 World Expo will provide hundreds of opportunities for U.S. firms.
